[fn. 3] 3. Although the in-court identifications were somewhat hazy, the lineup identification seems to have been clear and positive. The lineup is not in the record. [fn. 4] 4. Any prejudice, possibly the result of this court's action in reversing (see fn. 3), would have been solely the result of the trial court's refusal to permit counsel to examine the lineup. [fn. 5] 5. The following is an example of the detective's testimony. "Q. As to this description, did you check with the defendant's civil rights? A. Yes, I did. Q. You have them, have you brought them to us? A. I have not. Q. Did you check with any known criminals in that area? A. I had a check made with every law enforcement official that was available and the results were... no known criminals. Q. Was the defendant named in your investigation? A. The defendant was named because his name was known to the victim, her daughter. Q. And is this information available in the records, also? A. It is available to the investigating officers, yes. Q. These are public records? A. They are public records. Q. And it is your testimony that the defendant was not known by the general public to be a criminal? A. That is right. Q. Was it your experience as a detective that it was not your experience, generally speaking, to have a person arrested for robbery and you wouldn't arrest them on your investigation of robbery and that the arrest would be made by some other police agency? A. It is possible that a person could be arrested on a complaint but that would not necessarily mean that they were charged with a crime. Q. So you do have records that show what was arrested on what charge, but not necessarily that the person was subsequently charged with a crime? A. That is correct. Q. And I am interested in that because I have some brief that I could use, showing that on November the 20th, 1967, a person named Peter Curtis Williams was arrested and held in San Mateo County Jail.
