Limitations The Android emulator "AVD" (Android Virtual Device) requires the use of the ADB tool to transfer the firmware files. The Avd Manager required a valid user account, it will not run without a user account, even if you skip the. The emulator will require "root access", which means that you have to be running the emulator as an administrator, otherwise you will see. UPDATED v5.5(32bit) The AV-Box is a Play-on-Linux GUI for running Android OS emulators on Linux Operating Systems, and is required for this guide. For Windows: Start > Windows Start Menu > Programs > Android > Google Play (If this program is not automatically launched, launch it). Under Emulators, select the File > Select AVD Manager. Before you start the AVD manager, first make sure that you have set up the Android SDK properly by clicking the following tutorial link : Android SDK Setup. After you have started the manager, click on File > Select AVD Manager. Select the emulator you want to use, then click on New.... The emulator will take several minutes to load, then once it is ready click the OK button. Next the emulator will need to be setup. You will need to ensure you have the Google App. For example, you will need to have the Google Play Store installed. In order to configure this the Android SDK uses the android.apk files from the emulator. These files are located under the /user_data/. Run adb push to copy the.apk file to the sdcard These files are under /user_data/avd/. If you browse to your sdcard you should be able to see the Android Studio AVD Manager from under. However it may not be in your AVD list. To add it to your AVD's, click on AVD Manager, then click on the "menu" button and select 'Add' to add it
